

“ON” Framework 6

Talk IN Action

What the framework states:

Use a conversation to paint a scene, and action drives a scene (and a conversation) forward, allowing you to gain some momentum.

What this means:

Show don't tell.

A girl will get a much better sense of your personality if you bring her into your world through action stories, then if you simply relate facts to her like “I’m really into martial arts.”

Big Ideas:

You are Painting a Picture. The better, more action packed the picture is, the easier it will be to draw her in.

Once You've Created the Scene, You Can Both Add to it Very Easily

It Creates Momentum

It Moves the Conversation Forward

The Goal of Being "ON" is to Naturally Move the Conversation Forward.

Example:

Say you and a girl are talking about your interest in charity.

The WRONG way to approach this would be to say something like "Oh, you volunteer in soup kitchens? That is awesome. I'd love to do that one day too."

My VERSION to a Girl

"That's awesome, I once saw a guy give a homeless man a few bucks, and the homeless guy gets the biggest shit eating grin on his face, and runs up to the guy, I'm thinking he's about to attack him or something and he gives him a giant bear hug. And I'm remember thinking, man, I'd like to people to make people happy like that one day. It's cool that you get to do that... That inspires me to get off my ass."

The Reality of What I Just Said.

I painted her a picture of a scene from my life, and she will have felt like she got to know me a lot more than if I simply stated "I want to volunteer one day too."

Homework:

Practice Talking in Action

Look for ways to put whatever you want to say into action.

Here is an example:

Me: Ballet, really that's cool? So like I have a totally warped vision of ballet dancers now because of black swan, I just imagine you all like cutting each others break lines, pushing each other down the stairs, then like, violently making out weight each other. Any of that ever happen to you?
