

“ON” Framework 10

Telegraph Your Punches

What the framework states:

When You Answer Your Own Question From Your Own Point of View Before Asking It, It Allows Her to Feel More Comfortable Sharing and Expressing.

What this means:

Before asking a girl a question, share something or reveal something during the buildup to the question that will inspire her to have a better answer.

Big Ideas:

Sharing Your Answer While Asking a Question Gives Her Time to Prepare an Answer

When You Answer Your Own Question From Your Own Point of View Before Asking It, It Allows Her to Feel More Comfortable Sharing and Expressing

Be Willing to Imagine Up a Scenario to Get an Emotion Across

Paint a Visual Picture That Helps Her Give a Better Answer

The Better Her Responses, the Better The Entire Vibe

Constantly Combine Frameworks

Example:

If you are talking to a girl and want to get to know her wants, aspirations, or just something fun or silly about her that will help build a connection.

Say I'm about to ask her what is something she has always wanted to do...

My VERSION to a Girl

"Hey I want to learn to play chess. I want to be all cerebral, and calculating my move, just like destroying nerds (You mime some of this out.) What do you want to do that you have never done?"

The Reality of What I Just Said.

Before asking her what she wants to do that she's never done, I encouraged her to give a more fun and playful answer by first sharing my answer to the question in a fun, playful way.

Homework:

Practice Telegraphing Your Punches

Next time you want to inspire a better answer from someone, first, reveal something about yourself in the question that will point them in the direction you want the vibe of the conversation to go.