

“ON” Framework 3

Co-Create the Moment

What the framework states:

The magic point in a conversation where you're completely ON happens when the conversation spotlight is brightly shining on both YOU and HER

What this means:

Always keep the conversation focused on you and her. And do this by speaking in: I, You, We

Big Ideas:

Winning the Game is About Making Her Your Teammate

The Magic Happens When the Spotlight Is Shining on Both of You

Always Be Thinking in Terms of I, You,
We

Be Conscious to Relate Whatever You're Talking About Back to Her

The Trick to Complimenting a Girl is to Always Make it About You and Her

Examples:

Here is an example of You and I:

"When I got here, I totally forgot what you looked like. So when I saw you I was whooohoo. Ok. Cool."

Or

“I went to this cool lounge Tuesday, you would totally like it because you could dress all funky. I think it’s totally your style.

The Reality of What I Just Said.

I made what I was talking about center around me and her. And even when I was talking about a lounge, I made it about how I thought she would like it because of my observations about her.

Here is an example of WE:

“We are such assholes. Our kid would be such a dick.”

Or

“I have a horrible voice, I bet though, if we recorded a song with the both us singing, maybe a monkey playing the Tambourine, we'd be a YouTube sensation.

The Reality of What I Just Said.

Again I made us teammates. Always be conscious to bring her into whatever you're talking about.

Example of complimenting her in the You and I method:

“You look so fucking elegant, I'd like to mess your hair up and see if you still look good.”

“You're very intimidating in a positive way, I feel like I need be more mature around you.”

Homework:

Practice Using I, You, We

No matter who you have your next conversation with, practice using the I, You, We way of communicating with them.