

“ON” Framework 5

Its All About Anecdotes

What the framework states:

Anecdotes Are What You Use to Express Yourself and Get Your Personality Across

What this means:

You don't express your personality by listing facts about yourself and what you like. You express your personality by taking the other person inside your world through the use of anecdotes.

These anecdotes are all around you, they happen every day, and don't need to be some compelling action packed story. It simply about packaging up YOUR PERSONALITY and bringing other people into your world.

Big Ideas:

Develop the Ability to Think Anecdotally
About Your Life

It's Not About Presenting the Other
Person with Facts

Its About Giving Them an Anecdote That Gives Them a Glimpse Inside Your Mind
and World View

An Anecdote Gives A Glimpse Inside Your Head For the Other Person to See, to Relate to, to Understand

The Best Way to Get Information Across is to Wrap Up a Feeling in An Anecdote

What Was Going Through Your Mind As It Happened Is the Most Important Element of a Story and an Anecdote

Example:

Say you and a girl are talking about what you are studying in college. And she asks you why you chose to study English.

The WRONG way to answer this would be to list the factual reasons you chose it like you were good at writing, you thought it would be easy, you like to read, or whatever.

Instead you want to give a girl a glimpse inside your mind through an anecdote.

My VERSION to a Girl

“I chose English, I don’t even know why, it was probably like a fucking movie or something. I was stoned watching Reality Bites, and Ethan Hawke’s character seemed all cool and philosophical and I pictured my self laying in my dorm room, scribbling my deep insights into a notebook, in between massive bong hits. So essentially I owe 4 wasted years of college to Ethan Hawke. What about you? Why did you choose to major in finance..”

The Reality of What I Just Said.

I brought her inside my head and kept my imagination running and she will have felt like she got to know me a lot more than if I simply told her why I chose the major.

Homework:

Practice Thinking and Talking Anecdotally.

After identifying (on paper) at least a half dozen topics that tend to come up in talking to girls, also think of an interesting story or example you can give that illustrates whatever point you're trying to make.

Be on the lookout for anecdotal material you can use in conversations.