

“ON” Framework 7

Hit the Fast Forward Button

What the framework states:

Get in the habit of skipping over the boring parts of conversation and jump right into the “fun” and emotional realms.

What this means:

Some of the best, most intriguing opening scenes of a book or movie occur in media res. Meaning “in the middle.”

The same goes for conversations. Instead of going through all the get to know you chit chat, jump right into a story or anecdote, or asking her opinion on something.

Big Ideas:

Its Possible and Advantageous to Skip the Boring Parts

Skip the Small Talk

Its About Assuming Rapport

You Can Always Backup Later to Fill in the Details

Eliminate Your Need to Give Someone Your Back Story

This Framework is About Creating the Illusion of Rapport

Resist the Urge to Engage in Small Talk

Make your goal to Just Find Out if She's Cool and Easy to Talk To

Example:

When you sit down on a date with a girl for the first time, instead of going through the “polite” conversation about her drive over, the weather, and other boring topics, jump right into something more engaging that will allow the two of you to express your personalities easier.

My VERSION to a Girl

“So, I’m trying to avoid this friend that keeps calling me, I like the guy, but he's just like a "user", kind of guy you know doesn’t have your back, so I’m driving over here, and he's calling...”

The Reality of What I Just Said.

I immediately brought some drama and gossip into a conversation that could have easily swayed toward the boring or mundane small talk that most dates start with.

Homework:

Resist the Urge to Provide Back Story.
And practice jumping to something interesting early on.